RESPONSIBILITY

I believe:

- every issue should be examined by two fundamental questions:

1. What role should personal responsibility play in the matter?

2. Is it fiscally responsible?

- America is only as strong as its people, therefore individuals should be held personally accountable for their actions and decisions.

- the federal government should be limited to national defense, infrastructure, education, and providing a social safety net.

- corporations should be held accountable when they breach their duties to employees, local communities, and the environment.

- no industry or business should be deemed or allowed to grow to be "too big to fail."

- unbalanced budgets that simply perpetuate our current national deficit approaching $12 trillion and increasing $4 billion a day are unsustainable.

RECOVERY

I believe:

- education and unemployment are sides of the same coin and should be South Carolina's primary concerns.

- we should maximize our potential in two key ways:

1. by leveraging our already existing, top-rated research and education institutions in our district. We need to support education at every level.

2. by highlighting the diverse range of technical skills belonging to the hard-working, blue collar citizens and public officials of the third district and thereby recruit more businesses.

- that while under the current, complicated IRS tax scheme, we should encourage lower taxes for small businesses in order to promote job creation.

REFORM

I believe:

- a public official should have the political courage to not only discuss reform, but to offer his or her plan of reform.

I pledge to be a candidate with political courage to confront both the issues of today and tomorrow with a set of unwavering principles and an independent mind.
